

- Connect with the community and get out of your comfort zone: walk through a different neighborhood and visit a unique local market.
- Give your taste buds a vacation: skip the food chains and try a local ethnic restaurant. Not many ethnic options in your community? No problem! Try a new recipe from another culture. Allrecipes.com (allrecipes.com/recipes/world-cuisine/) and Epicurious (www.epicurious.com/recipesmenus/global/) offer a wide selection of recipes, or check out a new cookbook from your local library.
- Read a book about a different person, culture, country and/or experience. Check out our book list (diversity.missouri.edu/leαrn/books. php) and Goodreads Group for recommendations by MU students, staff, and faculty.
- Help make a difference by volunteering: connect with a local organization.
- Listen to local, regional, international, or a different genre of music. Free online international radio stations are available at www.live365.com/index.live or stop by your local library for free tunes.

- Host your own international film festival: rent movies from around the world and learn about different cultures and experiences through film. Services such as Netflix, Hulu, and Amazon have many foreign films available for streaming, or visit your local public library.
- Explore your heritage, family history and personal cultural world view. Local libraries or historical societies often offer free access to genealogy databases like Ancestry.com, or check out Cyndi's List (www.cyndislist.com) of free genealogy web resources to get started.
- Visit a local museum or cultural center. If your community doesn't have a local museum, consider a day trip adventure to a larger city in your region to take in the museums, cultural centers, and ethnic festivals.
- Challenge yourself to learn 10 new words in another language. Check with your local library for language resources or try the BBC's online language lessons (www.bbc.co.uk/languages/) to get started.

For additional information, please visit the MizzouDiversity website at diversity.missouri.edu.